

A Case Study of Biblical Reading

Introduction

George Smith (pseudonym), a 38-year-old software engineer, had been an active member of his local church community for over a decade. He grew up in a devout Christian family where reading the Bible and attending church services were integral parts of his upbringing. However, over the past few years, George found himself gradually losing interest in reading the Bible, which once brought him solace and spiritual guidance.

Case Background

George's loss of interest in reading the Bible began subtly. Initially, he attributed it to his busy work schedule and the demands of family life. However, as time passed, he realized that his spiritual life was becoming increasingly neglected. Despite his attempts to reignite his passion for biblical reading, he found himself disengaged and disconnected from the scriptures that once held profound significance in his life.

Discussion Questions

1. What things were causing George to lose interest in the Bible? What other factors can cause a loss of interest in reading the Bible?
2. What advice would you give to George?
